Next Normal, Next Now

A month ago my friend Bob Stilger and I were talking CoVid. It feels like a year ago now. We've known each other for close to 20 years. We count on thoughtfulness together.

Both Bob and I were sharing our resistance to the narrative of "back to normal." There was more energy, and honesty given multiple movements in these days, in the narrative of "new normal." But that wasn't it. We found our way to "next normal." Then "next now." Then "now." Yup, eventually the invitation is to be in the now.

I continue to find fruitfulness connecting "now" with the longer arc of things, both looking forward and backward. That, and how "inner" is always connected to "outer." I'm glad to follow that framework in the coaching and facilitation I continue to do. Here's to wisdom making for all of us.

A handwritten signature in black ink, reading "Tenneson Woolf". The script is fluid and cursive, with the first name "Tenneson" and last name "Woolf" clearly distinguishable.
